HOW TO MAKE A PLAN... AND STICK TO IT

Start small

Overhauling lifelong habits can be daunting. But it doesn't have to be an all or nothing approach. Start with a small goal – something you can achieve without too much struggle. Small wins can build the confidence you need to tackle bigger goals. Even changes that seem small can be good for your health if you can sustain them.

Buddy up

It's 5.30am and the alarm goes off. Your motivation to go for a run is low, but you made a plan with a mate and you can't let him down by going AWOL.

Making a goal with a friend keeps you accountable which can help you stay on track. This technique isn't just for exercise – it's also great for changing food and alcohol habits. Like Dry July, a bunch of mates giving up alcohol together for a good cause.

Change your environment

Sticking to your goals is harder if your environment doesn't support you. Think about things that can get in the way and make a concrete plan to make it easier for yourself. Here are some examples:

Don't buy junk foods like chips and chocolate in the weekly shop. If they're not hanging around the house you'll be less tempted to eat them.

Pro tip: Don't go shopping on an empty stomach.

Eat a handful of nuts and a piece of fruit before a morning tea so you're less likely to max out on cakes.

Catch-up with friends for a game of soccer, a walk around the river or a coffee rather than at the pub.

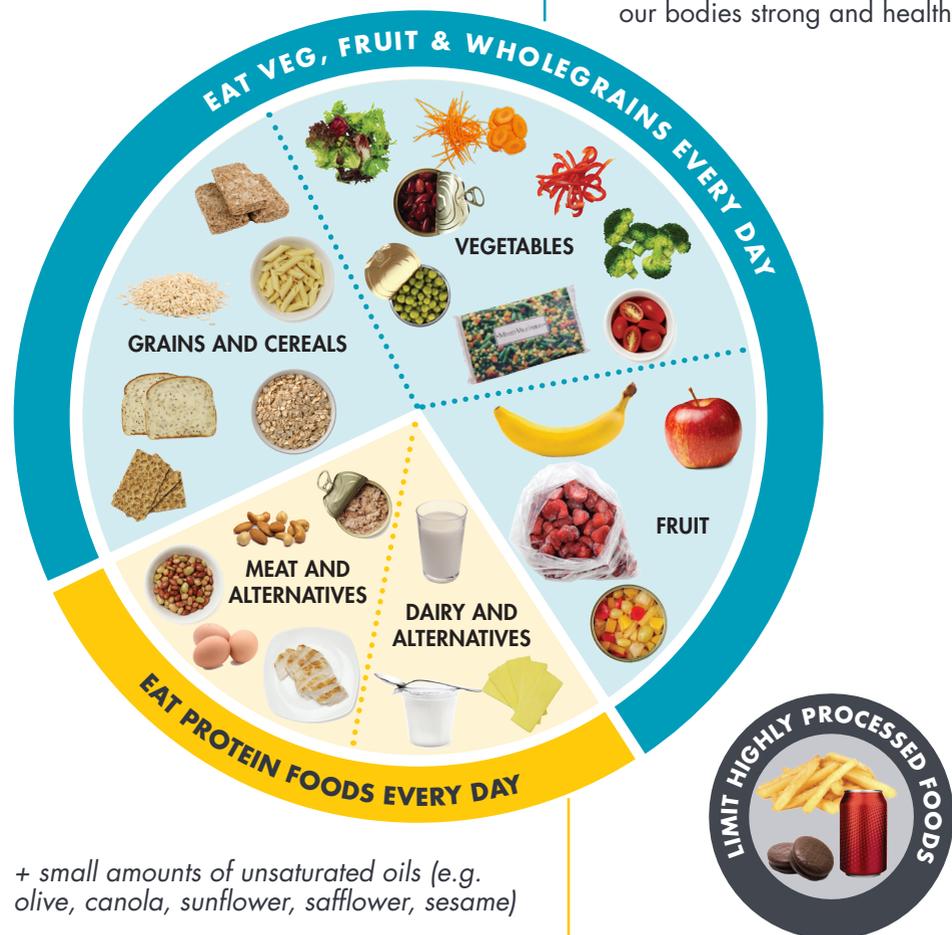

Find other ways to reward yourself after a long week at work – go for a surf, fire up the BBQ (tips for a healthy BBQ on page 12) or plan an early morning fishing trip.

WHAT IS HEALTHY EATING?

Eating well means eating a wide variety of foods, mostly from the 5 core food groups.

Visit eatforhealth.com.au for more information.

Eat vegies, fruit, beans, lentils and wholegrains (e.g. oats, brown rice and grainy bread) every day. These foods are usually the cheapest. We need to eat plenty of these to keep our bodies strong and healthy.

+ small amounts of unsaturated oils (e.g. olive, canola, sunflower, safflower, sesame)

Eat protein foods like fish, seafood, lean meat, chicken, milk, yoghurt, cheese, eggs, nuts, seeds and tofu every day. These foods are a bit more expensive and we need a bit less of them in our diet.

JUNK FOOD

What does junk food look like?

We know the usual suspects – chips, fast food, doughnuts, ice cream, chocolate, meat pies, sugary drinks, alcohol and most packet snacks are pretty obviously junk food.

But, there's also a whole bunch of junk foods making out like they're healthier options. That includes things like sports drinks, energy bars, fruit drinks, iced tea, muesli bars, vegie chips, ham and red wine. They've got a better reputation because of clever marketing but are still junk food.

Eating too much junk food can cause weight gain which, as we've all heard plenty of times before, can lead to type 2 diabetes, heart disease and even some cancers (including bowel, liver and pancreatic).

Junk foods are everywhere and they can be hard to resist, but with a little know-how we can bump the junk and start to eat better.

- ▲ For healthy versions of takeaway foods (like burgers, pizza and nuggets) check out our recipes on pages 22-35
- ▲ For tasty snack ideas, see page 21

Australians are eating too much junk food. In fact, Aussie men get more than a third of their energy (kilojoules) from unhealthy foods and drinks.

Junk foods are packed with sugar, saturated fat and salt, and don't have any of the good stuff we need – like vegetables, fruits and wholegrains.

- Alex Dreyer, LiveLighter® Dietitian

SUGARY DRINKS

Sugary drinks can pack in as many kilojoules as food, but don't fill you up or provide the nutrients that your body needs. What a waste!

Which option would fill you up more?

 600ml cola 1100 kJ	OR	 Banana + handful of nuts 1100 kJ
 600ml lemonade 1000 kJ	OR	 Tuna salad sandwich 1000 kJ

How much sugar is in that drink?

 Sports drink (600mL) 9 teaspoons added sugar	 Cola (600mL) 16 teaspoons added sugar	 Energy drink (500mL) 14 teaspoons added sugar
 Iced coffee (600mL) 7 teaspoons added sugar	 Chocolate milk (600mL) 7 teaspoons added sugar	 Still or sparkling water 0 teaspoons added sugar

Sports drinks

Don't believe the marketing spin - most Aussies don't ever need to drink a sports drink. Ever. Sports drinks are full of sugar which is bad news for your teeth and your waistline.

If you're doing more than 90 minutes of intense exercise, or have lost loads of fluid through heavy sweating, vomiting or diarrhoea, a sports drink or electrolyte replacement drink may be a useful option. Otherwise, regular water and the electrolytes present in normal food will do the hydration job just fine.

Flavoured milk

Flavoured milks might seem like an easy go-to option when you're rushed for time. It's milk, and milk's good for us, right? Not so quick – do you know about the huge amount of added sugars they have in them?

All dairy milk contains the naturally occurring sugar lactose, which is not bad for our health. However, flavoured milk also contains added sugars – many brands contain a whopping 7 teaspoons of added sugar in a large carton.

While milk does have some healthy nutrients like protein, calcium, zinc and vitamin D, it's better to choose plain milk (or whip up a smoothie with milk, yoghurt and fruit) to reap these health benefits.

Diet drinks

Although diet soft drinks are low in sugar and kilojoules, they've still been linked to type 2 diabetes and obesity. Why? Because drinking something sweet can prime our body to crave sweet things more often. This means we might be more likely to reach for that cake or chocolate later on. Diet drinks are also very acidic which makes them bad for our teeth.

BEER IS A FOOD GROUP, RIGHT?

Most of us don't want to hear it, but there's no getting around it – alcohol is bad for our health. It increases the risk of seven types of cancer, heart disease, and weight gain. The more we drink, and the more often we drink, the greater our risk. If we are going to drink, our best approach is to stick to national guidelines and have no more than ten standard drinks a week.

Did you know that drinking just two cans of beer each day means we're chugging down an extra 8100kJ each week? That's like eating a whole extra day's worth of food!

To keep off the kilos:

1. Go for lower alcohol drinks
2. Cut back
3. Skip alcohol altogether

How many kilojoules are in a...?

Drink	Size	Kilojoules*	Standard drinks	Four drinks is equivalent to
Full-strength beer	375mL can	580	1.4	Whole garlic bread
Lower-alcohol beer	375mL can	400	0.8	Meat pie
Wine	150mL glass	460	1.5	9 ½ chicken nuggets
Spirits	30mL nip	260	1	Piece of fried chicken
Pre-mixed spirits	375mL can	990	1.5	5 cinnamon doughnuts
Cider	330mL bottle	620	1.3	2 cheeseburgers

*The average Aussie adult needs about 8,700 kilojoules per day

What about low-carb beer?

The idea that low-carb beer is good for you is nothing more than clever marketing, designed to make the weight-conscious drink more beer.

Most beers are actually already relatively low in carbohydrates. It's the alcohol – not carbs – making beer so high in kilojoules. And low-carb beer still has a high alcohol content – meaning that it still increases your risk of cancer.

But everyone around me is drinking!

The social pressure from our mates and colleagues to drink can make being empty-handed difficult. But ditching alcohol doesn't have to mean saying goodbye to our social life.

1. Try a low- or non-alcoholic beer to keep up appearances
2. Be the designated driver and stay sober for your friends
3. Drink slowly and steer clear of rounds
4. Set yourself a maximum number of drinks BEFORE you start
5. Organise social catch-ups that don't centre on alcohol - join a local footy team, shoot some hoops, go mountain biking or head out for brekkie

The temptation to drink is everywhere! What can I do?...

Challenges and temptations are always there. Alcohol is a big one, but I found low- or (even better) non-alcoholic drinks a good way to still have the experience with less kilojoules.

I belong to a local sports club and managed to get them to stock this type of drink so I can still be social. If I have been to other venues that don't stock non-alcoholic beer I have quite often volunteered to be the nominated driver which takes the pressure away as I know I can't drink even if I want to.

- Paul

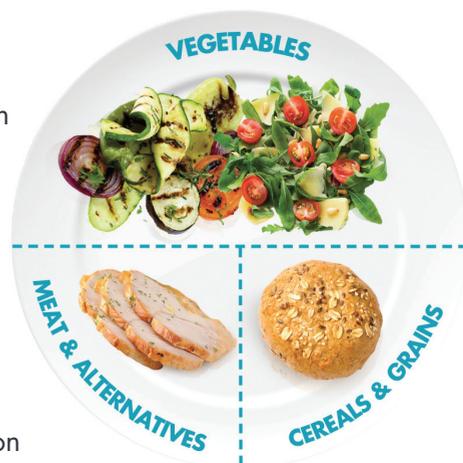

PORTION SIZE

Many of us were taught as kids to finish everything on our plate. But, when the portions being served are getting bigger and bigger, that means we eat more and more!

Bigger portions means more kilojoules. Keeping an eye on the size of our portions can help us avoid weight gain. This doesn't mean starving ourselves – it means bulking up our meals with fibre-filled options like vegies and wholegrains.

Here are some tricks to keep your portion size in check:

- ▲ Make a rule – always order the smaller size when buying take-away foods
- ▲ We don't need to munch down our dinner like a hungry dog – slowing down gives our brain time to get the fullness messages from your stomach
- ▲ Make half the plate vegies – they've got the least kilojoules and help fill us up. Split the rest between wholegrains (like brown rice, grainy bread or pasta) and protein heavy foods (like chicken, fish, red meat, nuts or beans). Check out the recipes on pages 22-30 for inspiration

How do I keep my portion size in check?...

When I finish a meal, I wait 10-20 minutes before going back for seconds, because it takes time for your body to send the signal to your brain. Now I concentrate on that. Smaller portion sizes, and then wait. And if I'm still hungry, I go for it, but often my body tells me that I'm okay by that time.

HEALTHY BBQS

Who doesn't love a BBQ on a hot Aussie summer day? Barbies are a fantastic way to get friends together, but let's be honest, sometimes the food leaves a lot to be desired.

Swap the usual greasy snag and sad salad for something fresher and tastier. Try our tips for hosting a healthier get-together.

Healthy BBQ checklist

- Choose lean and lower-salt sausages, burgers or rissoles
- Have plenty of vegies and fruit available
 - ▲ Throw some veg on the barbie - mushrooms, corn cobs, zucchini and capsicum brushed with a little olive oil works a treat
 - ▲ Offer side salads
 - ▲ Have cut up fruit available
- Use wholemeal or grainy bread
- Choose skinless chicken
- Make sure there's water available
- If you're offering alcoholic drinks, include lower-alcohol options like light beer
- Plan to be active – get out the backyard cricket set, frisbee or footy for some classic outdoor Aussie fun
- Be SunSmart - don't forget hats, sunscreen and sunnies, and make sure there's somewhere shady for people to sit

A WORD ABOUT MOVEMENT

We can't make a whole book about food without also mentioning exercise. That's because although we know that exercise is really, really good for us, only 1 in 5 Aussie men does enough.

The key message with exercise is simple – find something you enjoy, and do that. Doing some is better than none, and the more we do, the better. You don't have to pound the treadmill if that's not your thing. Be creative – get out into nature for a walk, make it social by joining a sports team, bounce on the trampoline with your kids, ride around the river or walk part of the way to work. Put in your headphones and blast your favourite tunes while getting active. Whatever works for you, that's what's best.

- Dr Ben Jackson, Associate Professor of Exercise and Health Psychology, University of Western Australia

A good aim is to get to half an hour of cardio each day (like jogging, cycling or soccer), plus exercises that strengthen your muscles at least twice a week (like weights, sit ups, planks, yoga or carrying the groceries/kids).

Sitting less and breaking up sitting time is also good for your health. You could do some stretches, hop on an exercise bike when you're in front of the telly, or use the bathrooms on a different level in the office.

Whatever size we are, getting active is great for our health. It can also be loads of fun, it makes us feel good and it's a great way to spend time with mates too.

If I work out can I eat whatever I want?

You can't outrun a bad diet.

No matter how hard we might try, it can be difficult to do enough exercise to offset the extra energy in large amounts of junk food. A fast food burger, chips and drink can be nearly 6000 kJ – that's equivalent to 2 hours of running!

Exercise also doesn't make up for what's missing in junk food and drink - fibre, vitamins and minerals.

I'm too unfit/overweight to be active

It can be hard to get started, but it's worth it. Becoming more active can help you feel better in your brain and body. Here are some tips:

Anything is better than nothing! Start slow and gradually increase the time and intensity as your fitness improves. It can be rewarding to see yourself get fitter, and this can motivate you to continue.

Choose an activity that feels comfortable:

- Get outside for a walk (and some fresh air!)
- Swimming may be suitable because the buoyancy of the water supports your body
- Cycling is easier on the knees than running
- Watching work-out videos at home means you can set your own pace

It can be hard to get up and get going on your own, so why not get a few of your mates together, or join a group that's designed specifically for guys like you. An example is MAN v FAT – it's a soccer league for guys who want to enjoy soccer, lose weight and get healthier.

Don't push yourself too hard. If an activity hurts, decrease the intensity or stop altogether. It's okay for it to be a bit uncomfortable, but pain is a sign that there is something wrong. Going too hard can also make exercise seem like a chore which won't help you keep it up in the long term.

7 DAYS OF TASTY DINNERS

Eating well doesn't have to mean tasteless meals or restricting ourselves to rabbit food. We can still eat all of our favourites – burgers, fish and chips and pizza – with a healthy twist.

Swapping junk food for home-cooked is our number one tip for starting to eat better. Home-cooked meals mean having control of what's going into our food – this means less sugar, salt and saturated fat and more fruit and veg.

Pro tip: Make extra and save leftovers for lunch the next day.

How do I stick to my guns when the going gets tough?...

What really struck me is that it needs to be sustainable. You can do anything, pretty much, over a short period, but if after that time you go back to your old ways, then that's no good for your health. It has to be changes that you can make part of your everyday life.
